a group closely tied to al-Qaeda and the Islamic State. What was the plan? The Washington Post reports that "as anxiety about security and counterterror operations mounted" after the Boston Marathon bombing, the CIA crafted "a plan to escalate pressure on jihadi networks" by targeting Libya's Ansar al-Sharia, a group closely tied to al-Qaeda and the Islamic State. According to the Post's report, the plan called for a CIA effort to derail a car bomb that was part of an Ansar al-Sharia plot to assassinate the Saudi ambassador to the United States and to destabilize the US government in an attempt to lure more al-Qaeda in from the field. The report goes on to note that the CIA needed help: "[CIA Director David] Petraeus, National Security Agency Director Keith Alexander and FBI Director Robert Mueller proposed to expand this joint cooperation to Libya and other nations where the Islamic State and al-Qaeda are active." As the Post's report explains, "U.S
